

Sign Prohibiting Access

The road that is now Jean-Dolidier-Weg was closed off until the 1960s, and even after that visitors had to apply to the prison authority for permission to enter the grounds of the former camp.

Foto: Ute Wrocklage, 1991. (Privatbesitz)

On the Plane

Because there was no public access to the grounds of the former camp, the participants of the first Belgian "pèlerinage" in 1947 borrowed an old army plane. This photo shows Lucienne Bouffioux scattering flowers from the plane above the former concentration camp.

(ABN)

Newspaper Article

"Hamburger Freie Presse", 9 September 1949.

Clergyman at the Camp's Gate

Canon Noël Carlotti, a member of a French government commission that enquired into the whereabouts of human ashes and the sites of the crematoria. The French section of the Amicale planned to erect a monument there. The picture was taken in May 1951 and comes from Renée Aubry's private photo album.

(Privatbesitz)